

Vince Blaser, MA

Vince Blaser is the Director of the Frontline Health Workers Coalition (FHWC), an alliance of 41 US-based public and private organizations working together to urge greater and more strategic US investment in frontline health workers in low- and middle-income countries as a cost-effective way to save lives and foster a healthier, safer and more prosperous world. He also serves as Senior Advocacy and Policy Advisor for IntraHealth International in Washington DC, where the FHWC secretariat is housed.

For more than 14 years, Vince has focused on translating a policy and journalism background to provide strategic analysis and visibility to the policy and communications priorities of major global health and development coalitions and organizations. Previously, he worked in advocacy, policy, and communications roles at the International AIDS Vaccine Initiative (IAVI) in New York and the Global Health Council (GHC) in Washington. Vince also has written and edited for the Kaiser Family Foundation's daily reports on global health, HIV/AIDS and women's health, held several positions as a newspaper reporter in Washington DC and Colorado, and worked at the British Houses of Parliament in London.

Vince has a BA in political science and journalism from Colorado State University and an MA in international education development from Columbia University.
